Acknowledgements

This is the second edition of the North American Regional Studbook for Blue Cranes, Anthropoides paradisea. A special Thanks should go to Dr. Randy Fulk, Curator of Research, North Carolina Zoological Park and member of SPMAG, for assisting throughout the compilation process and interpreting the data. Many thanks go to all the institutions supporting cranes in captivity and habitat preservation programs. A special thanks should go to the people at The International Crane Foundation for their continued research and conservation efforts for all species of cranes. Hopefully, all our combined efforts will lead to preservation of these magnificent birds and their habitats.

Wild Blue Cranes

Taxonomy

The Blue crane is also known as the Stanley or Paradise crane. Cranes and their relatives the limpkins and trumpeters are fairly closely related members of the order of birds (Gruiformes) that also includes the rails, gallinules, coots, and other marsh-adapted birds. (Johnsgard 1983). All cranes are in one of two subfamilies, Balearicinae or Gruinae, in the family Gruidae (Ellis et al., 1996). The thirteen species of Gruinae were traditionally divided into three genera: Buzonanus, Anthropoides, and Grus. Recent DNA and hybridization studies suggest that the Anthropoides and Buzonanus should be merged with the Grus (Ingold 1984; Krajewski 1988). DNA and recent behavior work suggest that the Wattled Crane and Anthropoides (Demoiselle and Blue) are closely related (Krajewski 1998; Ellis et al. in prep). (Ellis et al., 1996).

General Ecology and Food Habits

The Blue crane is primarily a dry grassland or upland habitat animal. "In South Africa, it is largely restricted to three biomes-the grasslands, the semi-desert Karoo, and the fynbos (the botanically diverse region of western and southern Cape Province." (Ellis et al., 1996.) The birds seem to favor areas where there is grazing of small livestock rather than on natural vegetation. Allan (1993) notes that the Blue crane has benefited from the advent of wide spread cereal crop farming and the extirpation and control of predators in the region. "Principal food items include the seeds of sedges and grasses, waste grains (mainly wheat, barley, and maize), insects, and small vertebrates" (Ellis et al. 1996).

Principle Threats

Humans, urban development, and activities surrounding human population growth and development continue to be the major threat to these very adaptable birds. Poisoning and habitat alteration are the most significant threats. "Poisoning of cranes in southern Africa can take three forms: it can be intentional and aimed at killing cranes that cause crop damage; or it can be inadvertent and aimed at killing other species that cause crop damage; or it can occur during the application of pesticides to crop fields (Filmer and Holthausen 1992; Johnson 1992b; Allen 1993, 1994). Intentional poisoning of cranes is illegal in South Africa, but has occurred increasingly in the last fifteen years." The cranes require dry, open grasslands, especially for breeding so commercial afforestation of natural grasslands with pine and eucalyptus for pulp and timber production has also become a major threat. Other threats include predation of eggs and chicks by domestic dogs, mining, collision with power lines and fences, drowning of chicks in water troughs and other forms of human activity and disturbance (Geldenhuys 1984; Filmer and Holtshausen 1992; Johnson 1992a, 1992b, 1992c; Scott 1992; Vernon et al. 1992; McCann and Wilkins 1994).

Status in the Wild

The Blue Crane is the national bird of South Africa. Still abundant in parts of its historic range; it has experienced significant declines in many areas over the last few decades (Ellis et al. 1996). "It is a resident in the upland interior of South Africa and possibly adjacent Mozambique north almost to the Zambezi, and with a small isolated population near the Etosha Pan of Namibia (South West Africa)." Since the 1980's, the species has largely disappeared from the Transkei region, Lesotho, and Swaziland. "In other areas, including eastern Cape Province, Natal, northern Orange Free State, and Transvaal, populations have declined by as much as 90% (Allen 1994; Urban 1996). The total population is estimated at 21,000 and is declining. Due to the rapid decline, the species is classified Critically Endangered under the revised IUCN Red List Categories. The Namibian population, because of its small size, is also Critically Endangered (Ellis et al, 1996).

Population Management Plan

Population Management 2000

Customized report prepared by Dr. Randy Fulk, SPMAG, based upon parameters set by the Gruiformes TAG and Lincoln Park Population Management Advisors at the AZA regional Conference, Riverbanks Zoo, Columbia, SC, March 2003. The goals set forth at the TAG meeting are outlined below in three steps.

Project: stanley03

Report compiled under Population Management 2000, version 1.11

Comments:

Date to be used for calculations: 4/1/03

Demographic data from: C:\SPARKS\Stanley\Mstanley.prn and C:\SPARKS\Stanley\Fstanley.prn

Genetic data from: C:\SPARKS\Stanley\stanley03.ped

Additional demographic information:

Data exported on: 22 April 2003

Data compiled by: Susan K. Scott

Data current through: 1 April 2003

Scope of data: North American Regional

Additional genetic information:

Dates: As of End of date <= 01/04/2003

Status: Living by 1 April 2003

Gruiformes TAG recommendations and projected results

Step 1: Research and clarify more unknown origins.

Step 2 goal: Bring in two pairs over the next five years:

Goal Not Possible - Can Only Maintain 83.3%

Program Objectives: 90% Gene Diversity at the end of 100 years

Other variables:

Generation Length = 15.0000

Maximum Potential Population Growth Rate = 1.0800

Current Population Size = 75.0000

Current Effective Size = 19.8000

Ratio of N_e/N = 0.3000

Current Gene Diversity = 0.9191

Maximum Allowable Population Size = 100.0000

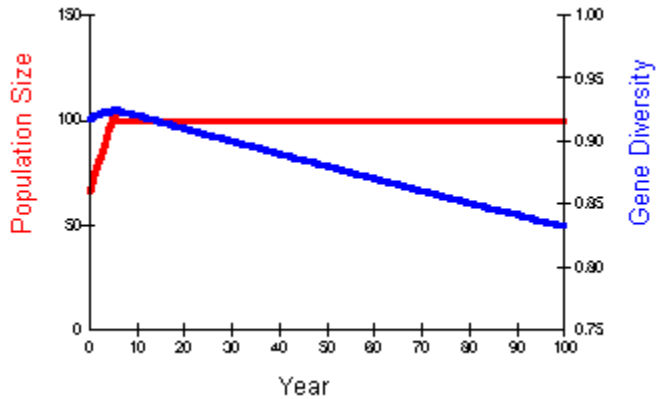

New Founders per Addition Event = 2.0000

Year to Start Adding Founders = 1.0000

Year to Stop Adding Founders = 5.0000

Years Between Addition Events = 2.0000

FGE Recruited per New Founder = 0.4000

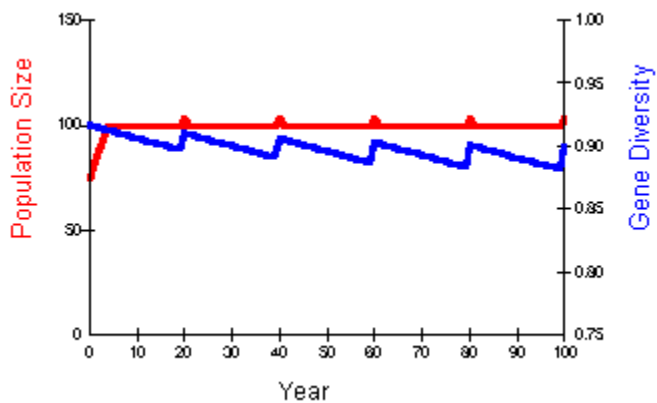

Step 2 Results: Bringing in four new founders in the next five years.

Step 3 goal: Add four founders every 20 years for 100 years.

Population Size Needed to Meet Goals Needed = 99
 Program Objectives: 90% Gene Diversity at the end of 100 years

Other variables:

- Generation Length = 15.0000
- Maximum Potential Population Growth Rate = 1.0800

Summary

The challenge set forth at the AZA Regional Conference and TAG discussions was to further refine the data within the studbook. There are many unknowns within this population that, if clarified, will most likely significantly change the genetic outlook. That coupled with importing four new founders in the next five years should stabilize this captive population.

Introductory Notes

The Blue Crane is Endemic to Southern Africa. Three main areas include Overburg, /Swartland regions or the Western Cape, the Central Karoo region of the Northern and Eastern Cape Provinces, and the eastern grasslands of Mpumalanga, KwaZulu-Natal and north-eastern Free State. An isolated breeding population exists in Namibia in the Etosha Pan (Harrison et al.)

The Blue Crane is a dryland species, relying on grasslands and agricultural land for its feeding and breeding.

Average clutch size is two eggs.
Incubation about 30 days.

Age at fledging is approximately 12 to 14 weeks
(Maclean 1996)

Birds in US prior to 1970 were assumed to be wild caught unless otherwise indicated by records. Only occasional captive breeding occurred prior to 1970. Records from 1970 demonstrate that captive breeding started to escalate.

Introductory Notes

The Blue Crane is Endemic to Southern Africa. Three main areas include Overburg, /Swartland regions or the Western Cape, the Central Karoo region of the Northern and Eastern Cape Provinces, and the eastern grasslands of Mpumalanga, KwaZulu-Natal and north-eastern Free State. An isolated breeding population exists in Namibia in the Etosha Pan (Harrison et al.)

The Blue Crane is a dryland species, relying on grasslands and agricultural land for its feeding and breeding.

Average clutch size is two eggs.
Incubation about 30 days.

Age at fledging is approximately 12 to 14 weeks
(Maclean 1996)

Birds in US prior to 1970 were assumed to be wild caught unless otherwise indicated by records. Only occasional captive breedings occurred prior to 1970. Records from 1970 demonstrate that captive breeding started to escalate by a few institutions.
